Afghanistan faces a long and challenging road to peace, stability, and development. But through thousands of lives lost and billions of dollars that have been spent, it is important to note that we cannot give up now. We must renew our commitment to supporting the people of Afghanistan. This war has had a significant impact on the everyday lives of Afghans. In recent years, the word "war" has been spoken by the Loya Jirga’s humanitarian officials with this in mind. Many Afghans have lived in a constant state of civil war and conflict for over three decades. Despite our efforts and the resources we have put into the war, the situation remains critical. The war against terrorism cost the country a staggering USD 9 billion per year or approximately USD 24,906 million per day. The figure is equivalent to 44% of Afghanistan’s GDP. It is approximately 113% of the total of Afghanistan’s 2014 national budget, and amounts to roughly the four times the Afghan government’s revenue collection target for last year.

According to a recent report by Equality for Peace and Democracy in Afghanistan, more than 1,500 children from different provinces and ethnic groups were reported to have been killed or injured in the first six months of this year. The report states that the majority of the incidents were related to the war against terrorism. The report highlights the need for a comprehensive strategy to address the root causes of violence and to promote peace and stability in the region. The report calls for a multi-sectoral approach involving government, civil society, and the international community to address the needs of the Afghan people and to promote peace and stability.

The Outcomes of War against Terrorism
