Asia Pacific Defense Ministers Strongly Committed to Eradicating Terrorists

WASHINGTON - The United States said on Tuesday it was “disappointed” at Russia’s veto of a UN Security Council resolution on the extension of an independent investigation mechanism for chemical weapons use in Syria.

The United States and 13 other nations, including Australia, New Zealand, and Norway, have formally called for an extension of the independent investigation mechanism for chemical weapons use in Syria, a move that was opposed by Russia.

UN Officials Call for More Action to Help Disaster Affected States

The recent earthquake and floods in Turkey have caused significant damage, and international cooperation is needed to help the affected areas.

German President Tells Putin: We Need to Work on Our Relationship

The German president met with his Russian counterpart to discuss bilateral relations, economic cooperation, and the situation in Syria.

Erdogan Opponent Launches New Party in Turkey

A former Turkish interior minister has launched a new political party in Turkey, opposing the current government's policies.

U.S. “Disappointed” at Russia Veto of Investigation Mechanism for Chemical Weapons Use in Syria

WASHINGTON - The United States said on Tuesday it was “disappointed” at Russia’s veto of a UN Security Council resolution on the extension of an independent investigation mechanism for chemical weapons use in Syria.

The United States and 14 other nations, including Australia, New Zealand, and Norway, have formally called for an extension of the independent investigation mechanism for chemical weapons use in Syria, a move that was opposed by Russia.

The United States, along with 14 other nations, on Tuesday formally called for the extension of an independent investigation mechanism for chemical weapons use in Syria.

The move came in response to a resolution tabled by 15 nations last November, which called for the extension of the independent investigation mechanism to continue its work.

The resolution was opposed by Russia, which said it was not in the UN Security Council's mandate to extend the mechanism.

The United States and 14 other nations, including Australia, New Zealand, and Norway, have formally called for an extension of the independent investigation mechanism for chemical weapons use in Syria, a move that was opposed by Russia.

The United States, along with 14 other nations, on Tuesday formally called for the extension of an independent investigation mechanism for chemical weapons use in Syria.

The move came in response to a resolution tabled by 15 nations last November, which called for the extension of the independent investigation mechanism to continue its work.

The resolution was opposed by Russia, which said it was not in the UN Security Council's mandate to extend the mechanism.

The United States and 14 other nations, including Australia, New Zealand, and Norway, have formally called for an extension of the independent investigation mechanism for chemical weapons use in Syria, a move that was opposed by Russia.

The United States, along with 14 other nations, on Tuesday formally called for the extension of an independent investigation mechanism for chemical weapons use in Syria.

The move came in response to a resolution tabled by 15 nations last November, which called for the extension of the independent investigation mechanism to continue its work.

The resolution was opposed by Russia, which said it was not in the UN Security Council's mandate to extend the mechanism.

The United States and 14 other nations, including Australia, New Zealand, and Norway, have formally called for an extension of the independent investigation mechanism for chemical weapons use in Syria, a move that was opposed by Russia.

The United States, along with 14 other nations, on Tuesday formally called for the extension of an independent investigation mechanism for chemical weapons use in Syria.

The move came in response to a resolution tabled by 15 nations last November, which called for the extension of the independent investigation mechanism to continue its work.

The resolution was opposed by Russia, which said it was not in the UN Security Council's mandate to extend the mechanism.