Nations are also of utmost importance in this regard. They can play a tremendous role in establishing the characters of educational institutions. A way that he becomes a positive member of society. Then there are social institutions, which can control or eradicate social evils. Among the social institutions, courts and prisons, an active law and order system makes utmost. An active law and order system strives to achieve justice and minimizes the social evils. Many of these evils are, in fact, closely inter-related and have the lives of the individuals inhabiting the society and the overall social order. No one can deny the fact that social institutions have the capacity to change and even sabotage the civilized and better living conditions. They are one of the most important institutions that play a role in the society. There cannot be one particular reason behind the social evils. There are many reasons, such as poverty, corruption, unemployment, crime, drug addiction, juvenile delinquency, robbery, theft, begging, and many others. Many of these evils are, in fact, closely inter-related and have the cause and effect influences over one another. All of these have the capacity to change and even sabotage the civilized and better living conditions.

Our own society, Afghanistan, can be studied in this regard. The basic reason behind the social evils that haunt us is the absence of justice and a system of check and balance. Moreover, there is no strong mechanism that can ensure that the rules and regulations are enforced properly. There are certain individuals who have hijacked the whole system and they are the ones who take advantage of it. The system is only for their service and provide them benefits and luxury, while millions of others are failing to get justice. In fact, their words and their desires, and do not serve a higher objective of bringing harmony within the society. On the other hand, corruption has made the situation even worse. In fact, corruption is one of the key problems in Afghanistan. Without solving the issue of corruption it would be extremely difficult to achieve developments as far as the social issues are concerned. If the resources and the energies are wasted for the corrupt intentions and self-centered objectives, there would not be much to exert against the social evils. Rather, the existing social institutions would further deteriorate the situation and give rise to many other social problems.

There have been various assistance programs and funds allocated for certain social problems but, as soon as money reaches the authorities who are responsible for certain programs to minimize poverty got involved in corruption and misuse the resources that are allocated for these programs. The resources would never reach to the deserving people and the programs would fail completely. Therefore, rules and regulations for the use of the resources and the amounts must be made clear. It is the responsibility of the society to ensure that these rules apply to all.

Most of societies in the modern world make their rules and regulations through a just and proper system of law and order. Strong law and order are the basic rules to control the social evils. Through effective law enforcing agencies, including police, courts and prisons, an active law and order system makes utmost. Likewise, the existing law and order system strives to achieve justice and minimizes the social evils. Through effective law enforcing agencies, including police, courts and prisons, an active law and order system makes utmost.
