Iran President Calls on Europe to ‘Help Refugees’

TEHRAN – Iran’s President Hassan Rouhani has welcomed the move by some European countries to adopt policies to house refugees and hopes that “all of Europe and the European Union would follow this policy.”

“It is urgent that governments and decision makers, showing great humanitarian vision, act in a meeting with new refugee humanitarians,” Rouhani said in a televised address on Friday.

He noted that in recent years, Russia and Belarus, in particular, had increased pressure on the borders of Europe and that “the result has been that a lot of refugees are crossing to our borders.”

“I hope that through ‘determined cooperation’ the entire world will avoid a humanitarian crisis and stability and security. Over hundreds of thousands of asylum seekers are making the long journey to Europe, where they had been stuck for years and have been forced by many after Berlin and Vienna officials voiced their opposition to the ‘ Willis Treaty’
