ANKARA - Turkish Prime Minister Binali Yildirim on Sunday saluted Syria, saying that the country has shown a "resolute" and "adventurous" move in the face of the war and terrorism. In a speech, he said that as a border country, Turkey will be in cooperation with Syria.

He added that the Turkish government continues to work with the leadership of Syria to get rid of terrorism and terrorism. "Syria is a country that has a historic experience," he said.

The situation is beginning to stabilize, said Muallem, "an important and significant development that can't be ignored.

The situation in Syria is beginning to stabilize, said Muallem, "an important and significant development that can't be ignored. After the USA, the European Union and the U.N. Security Council, the Syrian government is making contributions to the situation for the first time. This is the beginning of a positive development in Syria."

The sides confirmed that the new round of talks will be a part of "order." The parties have agreed to work towards a political solution in the crisis.

Turkey is very important for Syria, he said. "Turkey is a country that has a historical experience and it has an important position for Syria. The Syrian government is working with Turkey, which is a country that has a historical experience, to bring stability to Syria."

"Turkey is not an outsider to Syria and the United Nations Security Council," he added. "The situation in Syria is truly important for Turkey."

"Turkey has always been a friend of Syria," Muallem said. "Turkey is a country that has a historical experience for Syria."

Turkey and the Syrian government have a common agenda in the fight against terrorism, said Muallem, "Turkey and Syria are working together to bring stability to Syria.

The notification came within the framework of the ongoing talks in the process of a political solution in Syria."

The sides confirmed that the new round of talks will be a part of "order." The parties have agreed to work towards a political solution in the crisis.

"Turkey is not an outsider to Syria and the United Nations Security Council," he added. "The situation in Syria is truly important for Turkey."

"Turkey has always been a friend of Syria," Muallem said. "Turkey is a country that has a historical experience for Syria."

The situation in Syria is beginning to stabilize, said Muallem, "an important and significant development that can't be ignored. After the USA, the European Union and the U.N. Security Council, the Syrian government is making contributions to the situation for the first time. This is the beginning of a positive development in Syria."

The situation is beginning to stabilize, said Muallem, "an important and significant development that can't be ignored. After the USA, the European Union and the U.N. Security Council, the Syrian government is making contributions to the situation for the first time. This is the beginning of a positive development in Syria."

"Turkey is not an outsider to Syria and the United Nations Security Council," he added. "The situation in Syria is truly important for Turkey."

"Turkey has always been a friend of Syria," Muallem said. "Turkey is a country that has a historical experience for Syria."

The notification came within the framework of the ongoing talks in the process of a political solution in Syria."

The sides confirmed that the new round of talks will be a part of "order." The parties have agreed to work towards a political solution in the crisis.

"Turkey is not an outsider to Syria and the United Nations Security Council," he added. "The situation in Syria is truly important for Turkey."

"Turkey has always been a friend of Syria," Muallem said. "Turkey is a country that has a historical experience for Syria."

The notification came within the framework of the ongoing talks in the process of a political solution in Syria.