(1) ESG Encourages... The Ambassadors noted the concerns expressed by the Afghan people about the lack of progress in fighting corruption, the level of food insecurity, and lack of effective state administration at the local level, which end up creating public confidence in the fairness of the election. In this regard, they reaffirmed their commitment to support the Afghan government in taking all necessary actions to ensure a free, fair, and credible election. This is one of the most important economic issues.

Deceptive vows: Although promises attract the public but promise fulfillment is a major concern. Some experts believe that voter's trust is difficult, even impossible in some cases, when promises are made to the masses.

Speaker Ghani: "The promises Ghani has made to the Pakistani people have been turned into a reality. It is a fact, as he held out the ‘和平’ in a campaign speech," he argued.

He said: "President Ashraf Ghani is true to his judicial justice and is true to his justice. What the president has done, it is to be done by the people of Afghanistan."

He said: "In the next two years, every district, in total, will have been covered with electricity in all districts of Afghanistan."

Such promises were made by all candidates, and the people in the north and south are very tired of hearing such promises. But, what is the condition of these promises? Are these promises made, and are they kept?

The Promised Jobs: Many candidates have made promises about providing $20 billion in additional revenue to the Afghan government, and the government has promised to create one million jobs in the first month of the election cycle. This promise is to be kept, but what is the condition of the election?
