New York - German Chancellor Angela Merkel encouraged talks between the U.S. and Iran on Tuesday but said she “was not realistic” for President Trump to lift sanctions on Tehran before a formal meeting between the two leaders.

“I welcome it if it came to talks between the U.S. and Iran,” she said, “but the work that all sanctions are first taken off the table is really there.”

Merkel said on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly in New York, after speaking with Iranian President Hassan Rouhani on Monday, that “I think that is not realistic.”

Trump has flypipped his plan to pull out of the nuclear deal with Iran after denouncing the agreement’s terms and promising to impose new financial sanctions on Tehran.
